Frederick C. flashed something like their best tennis in the first set, which they took after a hard fight, but they began to lose their grip on both speed and control in the second set and were fairly overwhelmed in a row. The semi-final really supplied more spectacular tennis than the final. All four contestants in the morning round were keyed up to their best efforts and the tuesle that resulted was unusual for its spirited rallies, sharp volleying and surprising recoveries. Both the Fred Anderson-Letson combination and the Frank Anderson-Botsford team forced the play into the forward court at every opportunity and there was a good deal of blocking at the net in every game. Despite the fact that they had not played together in any previous tourna-ment Frank Anderson and Botsford showed every bit as efficient team play as the New Jersey champions, and individually were steadier and more niert.

Play opened with the Anderson-Letson pair trailing by one set, which their opfore darkness halted play. The contest was resumed where it had stopped and Fred Anderson and Letson took the aggressive, holding a slight lead gained early in the second set. Their opponents came from behind, however, and tied the score at 5-all. Games then went or service until the New Jersey title holders broke through in the eighteenth game for the set.
